If was INO, the year of London's World's Fair, and the yacht race was to be a feather of the English Exposition. Some one suggested that it might be a good thing if an American yacht could be flytted to compete, so an invitation was extended to the New York Yacht Club to send a yacht. No importance was attached to it.

But the American yachtsmen were designated at the honor. Knowing the merit of home ship builders they gave the commission to Mr. Steers, a moted builder and designar. The result was a schooner that eclipsed all previously constructed ones, and in July, 1831, the America crossed to Hayre, thence to Cowes, for the context.

She was hauled out, and under the fostering care of her skipper, old Captain "Than" Clock, was put in as perfect condition as any yacht which has ever raced for the cup, her forom bottom being scraped and captaenered carefully halled with red one yacht which has ever raced for the cup, her forch bottom being scraped and sandpapered, carefully painted with red lead, and then covered with successive coats of varnish into which "pot lead" of graphite was rubbed with brushes until the whole hull of the yacht from blank-sheer to keel shone like a mirror. Above deck the Mischief was superior in rigging and canvas to most of the New York fleet of the time, and she came to the line on November 2 for the first race in absolutely faultiess racing form. It was the same old story, the Mischief won by half an hour in each of the two races sailed, and the cup was again secured. That was in 1881.
